JOHNNY WONDER

A. The skunk is famous for its unpleasant odor. Its unpopularity is due to its unique means of defense — it protects itself from its enemies by spraying an evil-smelling liquid. (Contrary to popular belief, it is the liquid that smells — not the skunk.) The smelly liquid is stored in a pair of scent glands at the base of the skunk's tail.

When attacked, the skunk turns its back to the enemy, raises its bushy tail, and sprays its terrible liquid. The spray can travel several feet with good aim. The odor is so suffocating that it usually puts to rout any foolhardy attacker.

You can win a World Almanac if you answer the question: What is the name of the skunk who lives in the swampy P.O. Box 1216, Santa Cruz, CA 95061.
